

YOUNG CANADIANS ENJOYING THE WINTER SPORTS AT WITHROW PARK

Children of Fulton avenue enjoying the rink at the corner of Arundel and Fulton avenues. Even the baby and the dollie are there, and a wonderful day of fun and fresh air is ahead of them.

The boys are not the only ones who enjoy the tobogganing. These three little maids have one all their own, which they take to Withrow Park slides on Saturday mornings.

Picture puzzle: Find the boy or girl in this party who is sorry that there is no school on Saturday morning and that winter is here.

Young Canadians with their new "bob" at the Withrow Park slides. The boys know how to get all the fun there is out of the winter time.

At the foot of the Withrow Park Slides. The boys are waiting for the arrival of the last sleigh down, to see if it reaches the record made by preceding ones.

All ready for a Saturday morning's fun at the Riverdale slides. The climb up the hill is a long one, but the older children help the smaller ones, and they finally arrive and are soon all ready to go down again.

WONDERFUL WORK BEING DONE BY BLIND PATIENTS AT ST. DUNSTAN'S

Blind men, with an instructor, receiving lessons in sculling. In a surprisingly short time these men, for whom the light of day has vanished, become proficient, not only in sports, but in everything that makes life possible for them.

Patients receiving instructions in mat-making at St. Dunstan's. Patterns and intricate designs are worked out cleverly, solely by the sense of touch.

St. Dunstan's "Rag-Time Band," from which both patients and nurses derive much amusement. The good spirits of the patients must be maintained, and thru music the men are able to express themselves.

In the carpenter workshop, where St. Dunstan patients learn to make furniture and other articles. It is difficult to realize that articles turned out have been made by men who cannot see.

Blind patients of St. Dunstan's at dinner. Here, surrounded by tender care, the men pick up the broken threads of their lives and receive instruction which will enable them to "carry on" in the work-a-day world.

In the kitchens at St. Dunstan's School for the Blind, founded by Sir Arthur Pearson. The men apparently have competent cooks.

Men of St. Dunstan's playing leap-frog. Sports and games of all kinds are encouraged to keep them in good health and spirits.

In the boot-repairing department where the men are instructed in the art of making "sick boots well." The sense of touch is all that they have to guide them in this work, which one would think would necessitate eyesight.

Three bridges over Etobicoke Creek. The one to the left is the new bridge in process of construction; the centre one, a temporary structure, and the one to the right the radial railway bridge.

This is not a tank, but the new reinforced concrete bridge over Etobicoke Creek on the Toronto and Hamilton Highway. The temporary bridge is shown in the foreground.
